

Career Change - Is the hilarious adventures of a middle-aged accountant who becomes a reluctant gigolo in Monaco

After getting made redundant, watching his pension fund implode, and finding his wife has left him for an Italian shoe salesman all in one day, 48-year-old, accountant Peter Stevens is broke and depressed. After drowning his sorrows for two weeks, with thoughts of suicide, he takes his friend's offer of a change of scenery and goes to stay at his flat in Monaco. There he meets a beautiful blonde on an elevator who gets him a job with her escort service. The short, punchy chapters are an easy and humorous read as our hero tries to piece back his finances, love life, and self-esteem amid the glitz and glamour of Monte Carlo. Think Leslie Thomas or Californication adult humor but not explicit.

Never very good at sex; according to his wife, things do not start well as he careens through a series of disastrous dates, and he gets mugged twice in one week. His efforts at online dating looking for a normal relationship are equally doomed to failure. But, with practice and sex lessons, he begins to get better at his craft and starts to turn his life around. He visits a naked city with a German Heiress, introduces a nun to sex, and grants a special last wish to a dying woman.

He makes friends with Henri, a local concierge with a checkered past. With his help and a little luck, his life takes a serious upturn. Both his muggers are brought to vigilante justice. His old company begs him to come back, and money miraculously reappears in his pension fund thanks to a crazy bitcoin bet. Crazier still, his last date turns out to be his x-wife, at which point they find they still have feelings for each other. She's also delighted to discover he's acquired a whole series of new talents to keep her happy!
