Urine drug tests screen the urine for the presence of a parent drug or its metabolites. Urine is generally considered the best medium to measure in terms of detecting drugs and drug metabolites. Compared to blood, urine offers a longer window of detection that may be one to three days for some drugs and up to 30 days for others. Urine drug testing is by far the most extensively studied and validated process for drug testing. A non-negative (positive) result indicates that the amount of drug / metabolites are above the cutoff limits for the test.
