Anyone who is paying out-of-pocket cash for their prescription drug medication qualifies for immediate savings, potentially saving you thousands of dollars annually.

According to the AARP "Drug Prices Climb as Inflation Declines" Journal article January, 2010 :

"A recent Rx Watchdog report from AARP's Public Policy Institute, which regularly tracks drug price trends, found that wholesale prices for the brand-name medications most commonly used by Medicare beneficiaries rose an average of 9.3 percent between October 2008 and September 2009, a period when there was no inflation and, in fact, other consumer prices actually dropped..."

Recent jumps in drug prices affect older and disabled Americans, especially those on fixed incomes who won't receive a Social Security cost-of-living increase in 2010 because of low inflation. Higher prices mean that people enrolled in Medicare's Part D drug program more quickly reach the 'doughnut hole' - the coverage gap in which they must currently pay the full price of their medications. 'That, we believe, is unacceptable,' said AARP Board Chair Bonnie M. Cramer."
